Is There No Remedy for Intemperance?

"Yes; there is a remedy—a simple, easy, and effective remedy—a remedy so simple that it can be named in three words—so easy, that it will require no effort to adopt it—so effective, that if adopted, it will not leave a vestige of intemperance in the land. The remedy is simply this: Let the temperate continue temperate. Yes; let the temperate continue temperate, and then, when the intemperate die—and they will all die soon—the curse will die with them.

Christian fathers, Christian mothers, look at the facts in this tract presented to you, and count the cost of intemperance; consider especially what it is to go to the bar of God to answer for a sin of which an apostle has said, those who commit it shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven. Are you willing that your offspring through all generations, should be exposed to such danger of such a doom? Oh, then, awake from your apathy. Banish the scourge of intemperance from your dwelling. Forbid your children to taste it or touch it. Teach them to shun it as they would shun the viper—to shun it as they would shun the worm that never dies.

A clergyman was once needed by a doctor, a professional unbeliever in religion, who asked him if he followed preaching to save souls.

"Yes," "If he ever saw a soul?"
"No," "If he ever heard a soul?"
"No," "If he ever tasted a soul?"
"No," "If he ever smelt a soul?"
"No," "If he ever felt a soul?"
"Yes," "Well," said the doctor, "there are four of the five senses against one upon the question whether there be a soul."

The clergyman then asked if he were a doctor of medicine.
"Yes," "If he ever saw a pain?"
"No," "If he ever heard a pain?"
"No," "If he ever tasted a pain?"
"No," "If he ever smelt a pain?"
"No," "If he ever felt a pain?"
"Yes," "Well," then, said the clergyman, "there are also four senses against one upon the question whether there be a pain; and yet, sir, you know there is a pain, and I know there is a soul."

Enormous Consumption of Spirits.

The enormous consumption of ardent spirits in this country involves an incredible waste of property. When the marshals took the census in 1819, they were directed to collect and return to the Secretary's office the amount of all domestic manufactures, of any considerable importance, in the United States. From these returns it appears, that no less than 25,499,582 gallons of ardent spirits were distilled that year; of which were exported 133,843 gallons, leaving 25,365,739 gallons to be consumed at home. The same year about 5,000,000 gallons of rum and other foreign distilled liquors were imported to the above 25,365,739, producing an amount of 30,365,739 gallons, for our home consumption in a single year. Let this aggregate of domestic and foreign spirits be made the basis of a few plain calculations. Now 30,365,739 gallons is 248,932 hogheads, (at more than 124 gallons to the hoghead,) which supposing one team to carry two hogheads, would load 124,466 wagons. These, allowing only three rods for each team, would reach more than 1,160 miles, or nearly the whole length of the United States, from north to south. The number of hogheads necessary to contain the liquor must, upon a moderate computation, cost 600,000 dollars; and would, if placed so as to touch each other, reach more than 175 miles, wanting only twelve miles of the distance from New York city to Baltimore. Or, to present the subject in another light, the quantity of ardent distilled spirits, which is annually drunk in the United States, is sufficient to fill a canal forty-two miles long, ten feet wide, and two feet deep; affording convenient navigation for boats of several tons burden.

The cost of this vast amount of liquor, estimated at one dollar a gallon, exceeds 30,000,000 of dollars. How much good might be done with this money. How largely might it contribute to the convenience and prosperity of the nation, if it were expended in making roads, building colleges, hospitals, alm-houses, bridges, and churches; encouraging useful manufactures, forming canals, fortifying our seaports, augmenting our navy, in structing the poor, distributing the Bible and other religious books in our new settlements, establishing libraries, and sending out missionaries.

A Conservative contemporary is fusing with Brownlow's man about who is responsible for the Legislature paying itself in gold. Considering the immense Radical majority in that body, one might imagine that discussion were not needed at this late day to adjust questions in regard to which party must be held responsible for any of its acts. 'Tis a disagreeable fact, however, that some ten Conservatives, very unwisely and unnecessarily, gave their support to the measure in question. At the time of its enactment we exposed its unconstitutional nature. At some future day these legislators, both Radical and Conservative, will be compelled to refund to the State their forty per cent premium. In the meantime, wherever Edmund attaches to the measure must be borne by all who voted for it, both Radicals and Conservatives.—Nashville Gazette.
